

Hill's Pet Nutrition supports vet students

Hill's Pet Nutrition has donated a £30,000 to help aspiring vets studying at The University of Nottingham.

Undergraduates at the School of Veterinary Medicine and Science – the UK's newest vet school – will be able to get financial help over the next three years from a fund set up by Hill's.

The donation will be doubled over that period through the UK Higher Education Match Funding Scheme, making a further £30,000 available.

Intensive studying

Veterinary students are particularly vulnerable to financial difficulties because of the length and intensity of their courses – they have more years of study to fund but less time for part-time and vacation work.

Adrian Pratt, vet affairs manager for Hill's UK, commented: "We've known for a while that the debt burden on vet students is growing, so when the Vet School approached us with the idea we leapt at the chance to help out